Why: The Wonder of Learning: The Hundred Languages of Children exhibit showcases the Reggio Emilia approach for early childhood education. The 7,000 square-foot exhibition displays the work of the children and teachers in the infant-toddler centers and preschools of Reggio Emilia, Italy. Through experiencing the exhibition, visitors will have a greater understanding of children's thinking and will better understand the Reggio Emilia approach to education, using collaboration and relationship-based learning.

The multimedia exhibit is divided into stations that are interconnected, but independent. Each section is composed of a variety of media, and may include three-dimensional objects, videos, booklets, audio-recordings and children's work. The Pittsburgh exhibit also includes the world premiere of a new video.

The Atelier of Light is an interactive exhibit for children ages 5-8; offering visitors an interactive experience with light, shadow, transparency and reflection. The Atelier was designed to work with the exhibit and to offer a professional development and learning experience for adults.
